

This is Ladislava (Ládi- pronounced: La Dee for short). She was picked up on the streets as young as 5 weeks old, 9 years ago while I was living in Slovakia for a short time. I brought her back to the states with me and she has been a wonderful pup in these last 9 years. She (I believe) is a Kelpi

mix and so is a part of the herding breeds and she will herd you at times throughout the house. No nipping at all, but rather with her body. Because of this, I believe she would not be a good fit for an elderly couple or individual as tripping over her would be a hazard.

She is spayed and is house trained and kennel trained. She's been around my children since they were very young and was always good around them, but doesn't like to be layed on or cuddled with for very long. She is very much a herding dog where her mind is always in "work mode". But she is very loving and craves the companionship she deserves. She's also very loyal and listens really well to commands.

She's a bit anxious and nervous with new surroundings and can be a little vocal when she's nervous. But once she's settled and relaxes, she's your best friend. She isnt big on car rides. She's been around my smaller dogs since she was a puppy so plays well with smaller breeds that I know of. Ladi has not much experience with bigger dogs.

She is a medium sized pup at about 50 lbs. Even though she's 9, she's got beautiful white teeth, and is in great health. She's never had any medical issues. She's very active still and more acts like a 4 year old dog rather than a 9 year old and looks like she has many years ahead of her still.

I would really love for someone with property to take her as space is what this girl needs to run and play. She would be great as an only dog, but of course it's always worth a try to see how she would be with another pup before finding her a permanent home.
